Biographical/Historical Sketch

Although Warren P. Laird did comparatively little in the way of conventional architectural design, his career as an "advisor" on architectural competitions and projects greatly influenced many important commissions in the United States before the Depression. Laird also played a crucial role in shaping the School of Fine Arts at the University of Pennsylvania as its first dean in the period when its architectural program became one of the best in the nation.

Laird was born in Winona, Minnesota, the son of Lydia Powers and Matthew James Laird, and was educated in public schools before entering the special course in architecture at Cornell University in 1885. After completing the course in 1887 he was an instructor there during the academic year 1887-1888. Early biographical sources indicate that Laird also apprenticed and/or worked six years in architectural offices (three in Minnesota and three in Boston and New York), presumably before studying at Cornell. During 1890-1891, Laird traveled in Europe, perhaps studying at the Ecole des Beaux-Arts in Paris.

In 1891, he came to Philadelphia to become the director of the architecture program in the Towne School at the University of Pennsylvania, where his students would later bestow the affectionate nickname "Popsy" on him. Laird's drive to excellence led to a steady expansion of the size and prestige of the program over the next four decades. Laird's skills were the ideal complement to those of atelier director Paul P. Cret, who was recruited to teach at Penn in 1903. Laird's professional standards and superb administrative abilities led to widespread demand for his opinions as a consultant, planner, advisor, and arbitrator for private and government clients. When the School of Fine Arts was established at the University of Pennsylvania in 1920, Laird was named its first dean. He retired from this position in 1931, and was succeeded by George S. Koyl.

Scope and Content Note

The Warren Powers Laird Collection comprises records of his consulting practice and professional papers in 85 scrapbook volumes, together with two personal items (a photographic portrait and an award medallion).

Of particular importance to researchers are Laird's detailed records from U.S. architectural competitions under his supervision between 1894 and 1932. The collection includes especially lengthy documentation of the competitions for the design of the Pennsylvania State Capitol in Harrisburg and the Delaware River Bridge (Benjamin Franklin Bridge) linking Philadelphia, Pennsylvania and Camden, New Jersey. Notable campus planning projects for universities and other institutional clients include: the University of Pennsylvania, Carnegie Institute of Technology, Brown University, Northwestern University, the University of Wisconsin and the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition (Philadelphia). See Appendix A for a complete list of projects. It should be noted that statements of extent in the Appendix indicate the number of scrapbook leaves; each scrapbook leaf may hold multiple leaves of archival material.

Laird's documentation includes correspondence, manuscript notes and lists, printed competition programs, formal reports to clients, printed ephemera and news clippings. Laird also preserved a variety of visual material, including his own sketches of his planning projects and of competition entries, clippings of architectural drawings and buildings from professional journals and newspapers, photographic images of architectural drawings, models, buildings and sites and a relatively small number of photomechanical reproductions of architectural drawings.

Visual materials survive for more than sixty projects, many of them competitions. Of particular interest are visual materials related to the following architects and architectural firms: Paul Philippe Cret; Zantzinger, Borie and Medary; Raymond Hood, Godley and Fouilhoux; Thomas, Martin and Kirkpatrick; Cram, Goodhue and Ferguson; Palmer and Hornbostel; Delano and Aldrich; Cass Gilbert; Edgar V. Seeler; Rankin, Kellogg and Crane; Harry Sternfeld; William Van Alen. See Appendix A (notes) for additional significant architects and firms.

The Laird volumes document only three original design projects by him: his own house in Merion, Pennsylvania (with Edgar V. Seeler), and two projects in Winona, Minnesota. These are the Winona Public Library (with Edgar V. Seeler) and the Masonic Temple (with Charles F. Osborne).

Laird personally assembled and indexed the collection. In two cases, a topic or volume listed in his index is not represented in the collection. The specific lacunae are:

The Public Library, Lansdowne, Pennsylvania, Consultation & Report on Plans, 1904 (indexed as part of Volume 46, but absent from all volumes); and the Essex County Court House, Newark, New Jersey, Competition, 1901 (indexed as part of Volume 3a, but there is no volume with that number in the collection).

Commonwealth of Pennsylvania

Harrisburg, Pennsylvania

note/s: Secured by Governor Daniel H. Hastings as Professional Adviser to the Commission for the Selection of an Architect for a New Capitol Building . Competition. Includes photos of old Capitol after fire. Includes news clippings and court proceedings after Laird's resignation in 1897. Theodore N. Ely- superintendent of motive power of the Pennsylvania Railroad met with Laird & Gov. Hastings on March 31, 1897 about Capitol plans. Commissioners: Governor Daniel H. Hastings, Auditor General Amos H. Mylin, State Treasurer B. J. Haywood, President Pro Tem Samuel J. M. McCarrell (of the Senate), Speaker Henry K. Boyer (of the House). Board of Experts: Laird, John M. Carrère (NY), Walter Cook (NY- of Babb, Cook & Willard). Invited to Compete: Alden & Harlow (Pittsburgh); Cope & Stewardson (Philadelphia); Furness, Evans & Company (Philadelphia.); George Edw. Harding & Gooch (NY); Peabody & Stearns (Boston); James H. Warner (Lancaster).

Board of Experts ranked 8 submissions. Two were not considered for violating rules of competition. Winning design was published in newspaper without announcing winning architect. Two competing firms, Furness, Evans & Company and Harding & Gooch, sent lawyers to Harrisburg to protest Board of Experts decision. Harding & Gooch claim that Carrère told architect Luce that a submission with unauthorized colors (only monotone was permissible) and trees had been disqualified. Luce told Harding & Gooch, and they understood that submission to be their own. Furness, Evans & Co. were under the impression that their submission was also disqualified for using unauthorized colors, but Furness made an affidavit that his plans were only in one color and that color was blue. The State Capitol Commission rejected the rankings of the Board of Experts. Laird and Gov. Hastings resigned from the Commission. The architect of the design ranked first by the Board of Experts was James H. Warner of Lancaster. The holdings include newspaper clippings with renderings of the winning design of "The Proposed New State Capitol." Warner, Cope & Stewardson and Alden & Harlow filed injunctions against the State Capitol Commission. McCarrell & Henry K. Boyer.
